

CATANESE CLASSIC SEAFOOD CONCH

From the family Strombidae, the queen conch (pronounced “conk”) is found primarily in the Caribbean, where it uses a muscular foot to drag itself along the ocean floor. Once abundant, conch now is endangered, and commercial harvesting is banned in the United States. Major suppliers are Jamaica; Turks and Caicos Islands, which also exports farmed conch; Honduras; and the Dominican Republic. There’s an abundance of conch in the Bahamas, but it can be exported only as value-added products. Wild-caught conch is usually sold as frozen meat. Farming has made live and fresh product available. Whole, in-shell conchs range in size from 2 to 4 pounds. Both meat and shell are prized. When you buy conch meat, you get the foot. It is available at various degrees of cleaning (50, 85 and 100 percent cleaned of viscera), and prices vary accordingly.

PRODUCT PROFILE

Conch has a sweet, slightly smoky flavor, similar to abalone or clam, and an almost crunchy texture. The meat, raw or cooked, ranges from snow-white to a pale, golden-orange, depending on size. The larger the animal, the darker the meat. Young “thin-lipped” conchs have more tender meat than larger, “thick-lipped” ones. Fresh, farmed conch is sweeter and more tender than frozen, wild conch, which can be chewy. The foot has a protective covering, called the operculum, that needs to be removed before cooking.

COOKING TIPS

Farmed conch cooks more quickly than wild; don’t overcook, or meat will toughen. Before cooking, tenderize conch by pounding with a meat mallet, or slice thinly. Marinate sliced conch in lime juice for two hours for conch salad, or dice for chowder. For “cracked conch,” dip tenderized steaks in egg wash, roll in flour and pan fry 5 to 6 minutes on each side.

NUTRITION FACTS

Calories	130
Fat Calories	11 g.
Total Fat	1.2 g.
Saturated Fat	0.4 g.
Cholesterol	65 mg.
Sodium	153 mg.
Protein	26.3 g.
Omega 3	0.1 g.

PRIMARY PRODUCT FORMS

Fresh: Meat
Frozen: Cooked meat
Value-added: Canned, Chowder, Fritters,
Marinated meat

GLOBAL SUPPLY

Dominican Republic, Honduras, Jamaica, Turks and Caicos

COOKING METHODS

Bake  Boil  Broil  Fry  Grill
 Pate  Poach  Saute  Smoke  Steam